The pin passed through his vest and both shirts, and he hung suspended until taken down by his companions. The flesh over his chest was

Rutland County Farmers Protest Against

More than 200 attended the session of More than 200 attended the session of Killington Pomona Grange in Rufand Friday, to debate the question of taxation. The sentiment was expressed that private holdings of real estate bear more than their just share of the public burdens under the present system of taxation. It was argued that the farmers should not be taxed because they toil for months in clearing their farms of stones, underbrush and stumps or because they build new structures, thus making their property more valuable. S. L. Peck of Ira spoke forcibly on this point. H. E. Colburn, president of the Rutland County Agricultural society, Rutland County Agricultural society, spoke at some length against the present system, as did Philip Elmwood, who system, as did Philip Elimwood, who stated that if the farmers were permitted the same liberty in taxation as the railroad companies, namely 2½ per cent. of the gross income or 1 per cent of the assessed valuation, allowing the farmer a moderate wage for himself at the end of the year, the state would be owing the farmers of Vermont thousands of dollars.

The Trolley Question to be Fought Out in Town Meeting in Northfield.

There is to be a very lively fight over trolley matters at the Northfield town meeting, at which time the two factions that dispute electric road matters will lock horns. The promotors of the Green-field scheme are very confident that they will control the meeting. They have promises of cordial support, not merely from Northfield street, but from West Northfield, Northfield Mountain and East Northfield.

Northfield Farms people and some of the people through the central part of the town will oppose the plan on the ground that it would tend to kill the Millers Falls project.

As a boy he was employed as cierk in the Albany state currency assorting house. He then entered the employ of the Connecticut General Life Insurance company in Albany. At the age of 20 he was appointed cierk in the state insurance department. At 23 he had worked his way to the important post of examiner of companies. Four years later he was advanced to the office of deputy state superintendent. He held deputy state superintendent. He held that office through two Republican administrations, although he counted himself a Democrat. He attracted general attention through his exposure of tention through his exposure of graft and crookedness in fire and life companies. For seven years he kept indefatigably at this work, exposing a scandal of huge proportions. As a result of his efforts 12 fire insurance companies were driven out of business, and 18 life insurance panies of New York and 15 of other states were forced to stop issuing policies.
In 1883, at the age of 33, he was ap-

What may be called the aftermath of a Bernardston school case that has stirred the town to its depths was aired in the district court at Greenfield Monday. Miles S. Carpenter, the complainant in the former case against Miss Mary E. Harris, the teacher who was charged with assaulting Bernice Carpenter, was charged by the school committee with failure to send his other daughter, Gladys, aged 10, to school. It was the evidence of the committee that Gladys has not attended school since her sister, Bernice, aged nine, was spanked by Miss Harris with a light slab of wood. The committee claims that Mrs. James B. Anderson entertained with hearts of pink, white and green; Mrs. Parker black with hearts of blue and gold. The entertainment consisted of reading by Mrs. Hudson, recliation by Miss Rogers, reading by Mrs. Anderson, recitation by Opal Hudson. In the game of hearts, in which all participated, W. A. Holt won the prize, having secured the greatest number of points. In the donkey contest the prize was won by Eula Torrey. The remainder of the evening was spent in playing charades and various games. Refreshments were served and the party dispersed at a late hour, feeling that they had spent a very hour, feeling that they had spent a very
